liens, statutory liens. It doesn't appear in Article 9. It appears over in Chapter 52, and those liens, which appear at 52-1108, say that one of these ag liens has to have the name and address and Social Security number of the borrower, the name and address of the person that's extending the lien, the last date for the use of the product, the amount due, and, number five, the legal description of the land upon which the crops are growing or are to be planted. We require the ag chemical people to have the legal description. Now, why? One of the reasons is this is not a voluntary exchange. This comes when you simply buy the goods. This is not pursuant to a financing agreement, but I'm telling you that legal descriptions aren't necessary and you don't need to create a technical world in which these kinds of "gotcha" situations can occur. If we want to maintain equality and there's some concern about equality, we have LB 827 which refers to statutory liens. It's coming out of the Banking Committee. It'll be on the floor. If Senator Coordsen wanted to remove the necessity of a legal description of the land for ag chemical liens, I'd endorse that. That would treat then UCC liens...

SENATOR SCHIMEK: One minute.

SENATOR LANDIS: ...and statutory liens exactly the same, if there is any fear that some kind of advantage is being taken here. I think, however, that the general rule should be the simple rule that is now laid down, personal property does not have to have a legal description as to where it is. Growing crops can simply be described as growing crops without a legal definition, and I want to get away from the prospect of the "gotcha" mentality that can allow a second, third or fourth in line person to attack what should be the whole goal of the filing system, which is to create priority, so that somebody can be assured that when they lend money they are going to get it back.

SENATOR SCHIMEK: Thank you, Senator Landis. Senator Jensen, you're recognized to speak.

SENATOR JENSEN: Thank you, Madam President, members of the body, and I think Senator Landis answered a good deal of my questions, but I'd like to ask him maybe one or two more, if
